Lace Collection Goes on Display

One of the world's great antique lace collections will go on view at the Los Angeles County Museum today as part of the "Laces and Embroideries" exhibition to be presented in the Costume Gallery through Sept. 16.

Also on exhibition will be outstanding examples of historic embroideries from the Museum's collection, including a mid-17th century ornamental work box, splendid early 17th century gloves which belonged to Lord Fairfax of England, beautifully embroidered antique hangings and many other examples of the embroiderer's art.

According to Stetania P. Holt, Curator of Costumes and Textiles at the Museum, the laces on view afford a comprehensive survey of the history of lace from its origin early in the 16th century to the present day. The embroideries represent the
